

SOURCE K Female suffrage and representation in the Australian Parliament

Percentage of women in the Australian Parliament

Selected Key Events

- 1894 South Australia gave women the vote
- 1902 The Commonwealth government gave women the right to vote and stand for the Australian Parliament (not extended to all Indigenous women)
- 1943 First women elected to the Australian Parliament: Dorothy Tangney (Labor) and Enid Lyons (UAP/Liberal)
- 1966 Senator Annabelle Rankin (Liberal) became first female Minister in the Australian Parliament
- 1986 Senator Janine Haines (Democrats) became first female leader of a political party
- 2010 Julia Gillard (Labor) became first female Prime Minister
- 2013 Julie Bishop (Liberal) became first female Foreign Minister

SOURCE L

Photo of historic event at Australian Parliament

SOURCE M Street notice at a site where Brisbane's new underground rail line is being excavated, 2022

Archaeology

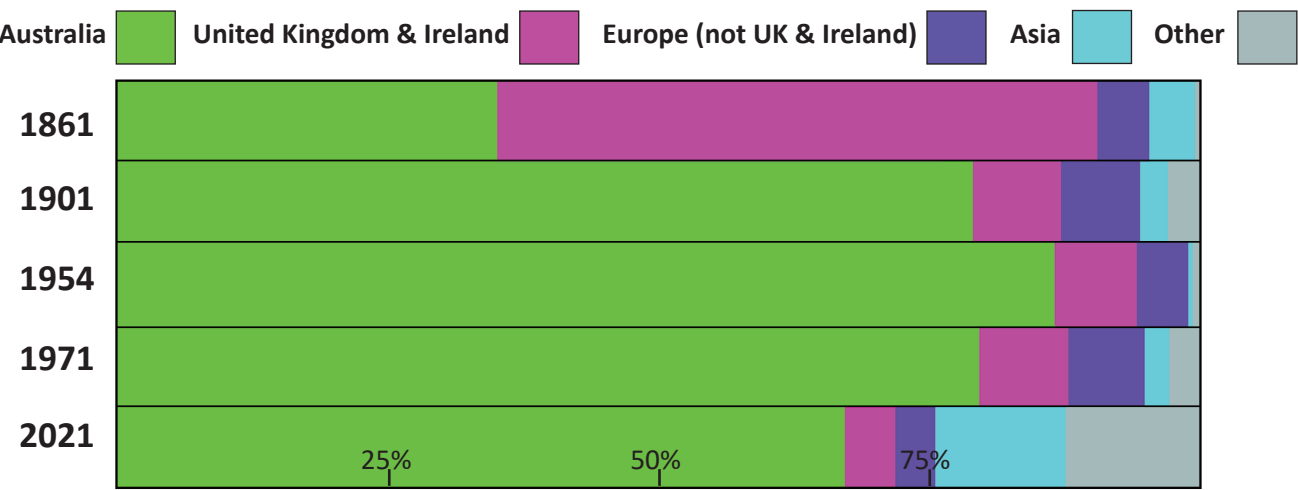

Building Brisbane's new underground means digging deep beneath the city at a variety of locations. During demolition, excavation and removing rubble from the worksites, items of archaeological significance have been uncovered and are now on show at the Cross River Rail Experience Centre.

SOURCE N Melbourne building site, 2022

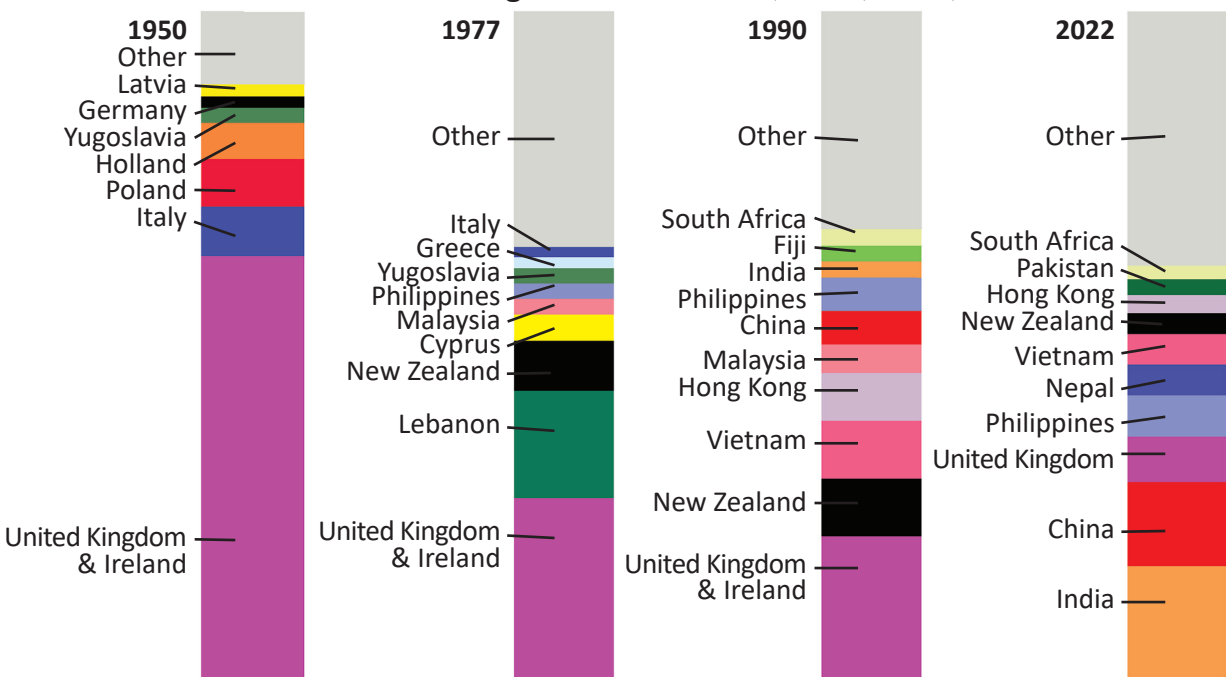

- Advertising W
- Building X
- Building Y
- Graffiti Z

SOURCE A Table showing where Australians were born, 1861 – 2021

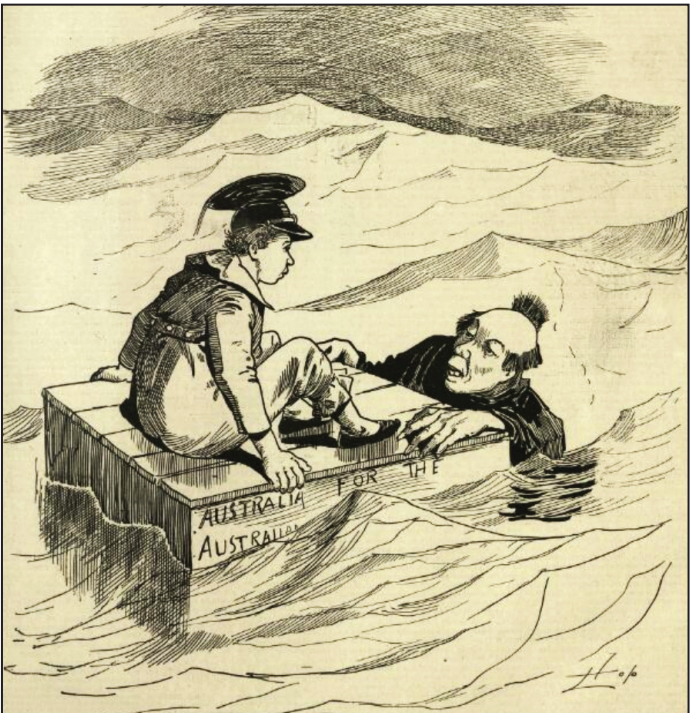

SOURCE B Where Australia's migrants came from, 1950, 1977, 1990 and 2022

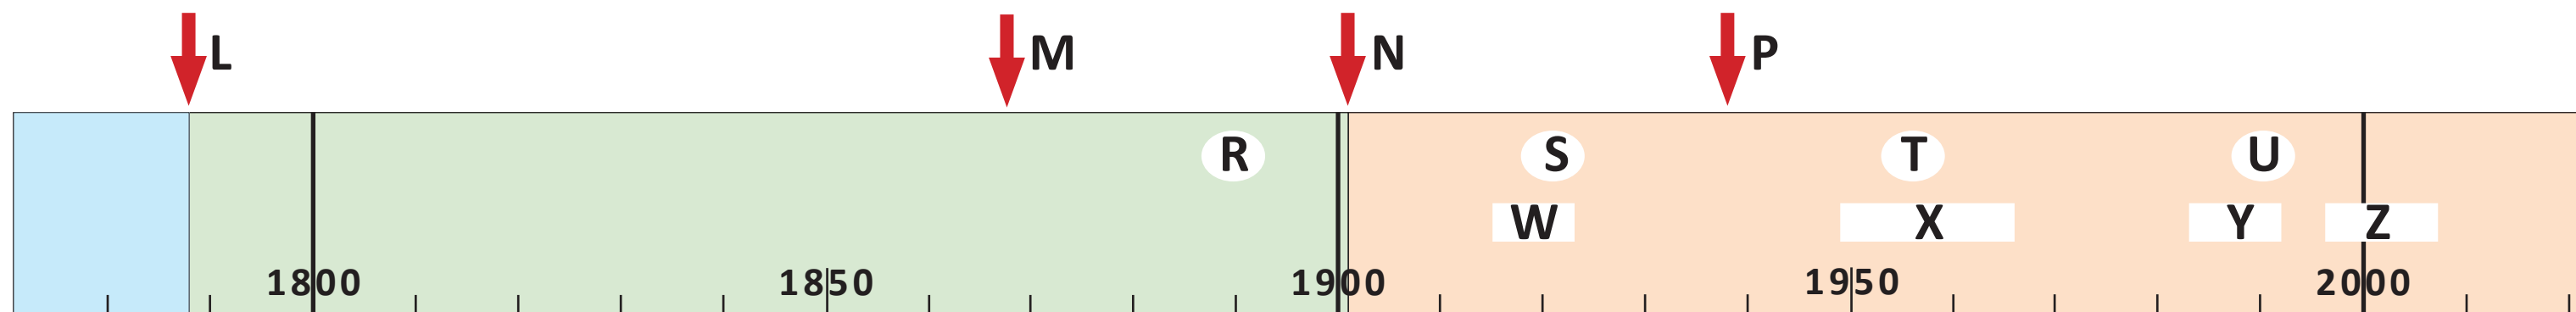

SOURCE C

Cartoon, Bulletin, 24 August 1895

Caption:
The Yellow-Trash Question
Asiatic Invader: "Better you catchee 'nother piecee box."

SOURCE D Timeline: Selected Australian history

SOURCE E Plaque at Fort Scratchley historic site, Newcastle NSW

A Predator Surfaces

Silent stealth
I-21 was one of twenty fast long-range B1 class submarines of the Imperial Japanese Navy. B1 submarines took a heavy toll of merchant shipping in the South Pacific and I-21 was the most successful to operate in Australian waters.

On the 8th of June 1942, at 0217 hours, I-21 surfaced in Stockton Bight and, under the cover of darkness, opened fire with its deck gun.

For sixteen minutes I-21 shelled Newcastle's industrial and commercial areas as well as Fort Scratchley. Commander Matsomuro's prime targets were the State Dockyards and BHP Steelworks.

A week earlier
I-21 was part of the Eastern Attack Group, a small pack of B1 class submarines that supported a midget submarine attack on Sydney Harbour. I-22, I-24, and I-27 carried the midget submarines upon their decks to the attack destination. I-21 and I-28 carried small float planes to report on shipping targets and defences.

SOURCE F Extracts from Newcastle Morning Herald, 9 June 1942

MANY CLOSE CALLS IN CITY SHELLING

Survey reveals little damage ... when Newcastle received its baptism of fire from hostile guns early yesterday morning. A number of shells fired from sea landed in various parts of the city. Apart from surface damage in some houses very few took effect. There were not any casualties...

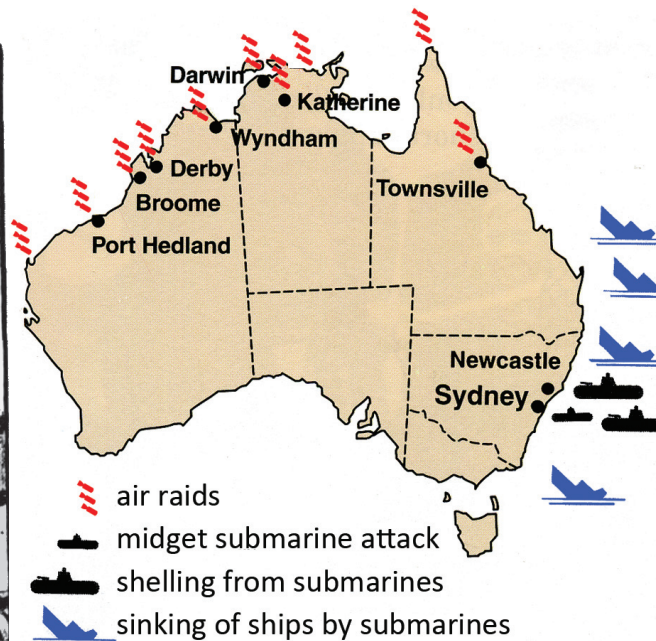

ALL OUT SEARCH FOR SUBMARINES

The official communique issued from Allied Headquarters in Melbourne today contains only brief references to the shelling of Sydney and Newcastle early this morning. It said: "EASTERN SECTOR: Sydney and Newcastle were shelled lightly without effect in a nuisance raid by enemy submarines." Authoritative quarters in Melbourne believe that there are fully 20 Japanese submarines, including midgets, operating off the east coast of Australia... Observers attach significance to the use of the term "nuisance raids" in the Allied Headquarters communique. It is taken to indicate an official view that the Japanese submarines which shelled the two cities were engaged in a hit-run raid.

SOURCE G Cartoon in the Newcastle Morning Herald, 10 June 1942

SOURCE H Map showing Japanese attacks on Australia during 1942 – 1943

SOURCE I Plaques from Centaur Remembrance Walk, Coolangatta QLD

SOURCE J Tripadvisor.com.au review comments on the Centaur Remembrance Walk

"See all the info, monuments and sculptures by walking up on the grassed area and down on the boardwalk. Insightful history lesson on Centaur ship, the war and lost ships."

"We really enjoyed walking around reading all the memorials of ships torpedoed or shot. Learnt more about the Japanese and German activities so far south."